

Congratulations!

MRS. ANGELA LIBURD-HENRY

THE CONSUMMATE PROFESSIONAL**

Professionalism is something that many claim to know about and would like to see a lot more of on the job, but not too many exemplify the term like Mrs. Angela Liburd-Henry. She is an assiduous worker who is conscientious about her job and goes above and beyond the call of duty. A consummate professional, she readily recognizes the importance of communication and mannerisms in dealing with employees as well as clients and that the right attitude can have considerable impact on both her success and the success of the Department of Health.

Mrs. Henry sees herself in the role of civil servant and not just as an employee in the Division of Financial Services. To that end, she can be found working to make up ground when there are not enough bodies to complete the task at hand and she gives 100 percent effort whether it's for the individual small business, government entity or large corporation. She sets high standards, often learning new ways to approach her work and is keen on not compromising principles. Thus, if it's not right and her signature is needed for approval, forget it. Orange, she is often overheard saying, is not her favorite color.

Mrs. Henry also exemplifies the term teamwork. The word 'no' is rarely in her vocabulary when a colleague requests assistance. And, in instances when colleagues pose major distractions, she does not allow these elements to get in the way of her giving generously of her time. Her professionalism is unparalleled in that regard and she is refreshing and easy to work with. Her hard work reflects depth of thought and she routinely goes above and beyond the assigned task to educate others around her and improve the outcome. Often, in order to ensure this outcome, she is at work late nights, weekends and on holidays. Further, with the Internet and Cellular phone technology opening up ways to work away from the office, she works even when she is supposed to be on holiday.

Mrs. Henry is certainly an asset to the Department of Health and is deserving of the honor of being designated the St. Thomas-St. John District Employee of the Year.

CFO Angus Drigo
VI Department of Health Family